

America does not even cover all its children. The United States ranks eighteenth in overall infant mortality. Only Portugal does worse. If the United States matched Japan's infant mortality rate, more than 15,000 American babies who died before their first birthday in 1994 would be alive. And the United States ranks eighteenth in the percentage of babies born at dangerously low weight. No industrialized country does worse than that.

Now again I do not want to keep coming up here and giving horror stories and talking about all the problems that we face because of the fact that the 10 million kids are not covered. But I think that the magnitude of this problem is such that if we do not do something quickly and if this House and this Congress does not address the problem fairly quickly, the problem only gets worse, the costs only get greater, and from a humane point of view it simply is something that we need to address, and so myself and other Democrats will be here on a regular basis tomorrow, the next few weeks or the next few months until our Republican colleagues on the other side of the aisle agree to take this up in a timely fashion.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF HOUSE RESOLUTION 89, REQUESTING THE PRESIDENT SUBMIT A BALANCED BUDGET

Mr. SOLOMON, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 105-18) on the resolution (H. Res. 90) providing for consideration of the resolution (H. Res. 89) requesting the President to submit a budget for fiscal year 1998 that would balance the Federal budget by fiscal year 2002 without relying on budgetary contingencies, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

A POSITIVE AGENDA FOR THE 105TH CONGRESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 7, 1997, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOX] is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

Mr. FOX of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I thank you for the time for us to have this special order to speak not only of the importance of moving ahead with a positive agenda for the 105th Congress, but also I rise today in the spirit of the Hershey accords, the achievements of our recent weekend in Hershey, PA, to join my colleagues in offering this special order. Probably the most important bipartisan issue we can address for the citizens of this country is the balancing of the Federal budget.

I rise here today and will be joined by several of my distinguished colleagues, not least of which is GIL GUTKNECHT, a Congressman from Minnesota, and urge the President to work with us using the same economic assumptions, meeting the requests made by the Congress following the number of elections and producing a budget that responsibly balances our budget by the year 2002. Once we can see where the President's priorities are in the free market of a balanced budget then we can begin a civil debate over the policy differences among the various proposals.

I just want to say at the outset that my feelings are that having talked to Republicans and Democrats alike this past weekend, our issues of balancing the budget, campaign finance reform, working on things like FDA reform, improving our transportation and working on other issues of common concern throughout the Congress certainly can be accomplished because the bipartisan spirit that I felt and the finding the common ground, I think, was very special.

You know for many of us, who may be one party or the other, we do not meet other Members of the aisle, the opposite Members of the aisle, unless we are on their committee or we come from their State. This particular retreat gave us for the first time in a long time a chance for us to meet on a personal level other Members who we do not serve within the same committee or from the same State, and by that we are able to at least find common ground, and while we do not want anybody to give up their principles, we do not want anybody to give up their agenda, we do want to make sure that we, as Members of Congress, will always remain civil, Mr. Speaker, and to make sure that we can do more and be more productive because we give the mutual respect they each deserve.

I wanted to ask CONGRESSMAN GUTKNECHT, who was an active participant at the conference, what his impressions were before we get into the issues of balanced budget and other items that are on your agenda, and I know how active you have been on your committee work, GIL. Could you tell a little bit of what your impressions were of the retreat and whether you thought it succeeded in achieving the goals that it set out to begin with.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Well, I would have to say it this way, that I was one of those who was not all that eager to go along, and it was guilt that got me to go to Hershey, PA. It may have been the chocolate that kept me there after the first several hours. But I must tell you as the weekend went along it was a very valuable experience, not only for me, but I hope for my colleagues and, most importantly, I think, for the American people.

I think that the American people sent us sort of a message in the last congressional elections. What they said in effect was that we want the Republicans to continue to control the House of Representatives and the Senate, but we want President Clinton, the Democrat, to run the executive branch of Government, and we want there to be some checks and balances, but what they also said is they want us to work together as much as we possibly can.

And one of the valuable things, I think, that came out of Hershey is we now, all of us who were there at least, have a little better understanding of a sense of history, and if you look at this institution, the House of Representatives, there have been some rather bloody fights on this House floor. I mean there have been Members who have been caned, there have been fist fights, there have been arguments—

Mr. FOX of Pennsylvania. The caning was in the Senate, the fist fights were in the House.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. But we have had more than our share of fisticuffs that were associated with the debate here on the floor. We have also had periods where there was consensus building, cooperation, and much more agreement and ability to work together in a civilized way.

I think what will happen as a result of what we saw in Hershey is hopefully both sides will begin to reach out to the other side. I think in the end what we really need to do is agree where we can agree, have honest debate where we disagree. And I think the American people expect that, but I think they also expect us to compromise where we can.

Mr. Speaker, I would hope that over the next several months and over the balance of this 105th Congress we will see more civilized debate. There has been entirely too much trivializing, too much demonizing, too much personalizing the debate that occurs on the floor of this House.

We are going to have an honest discussion tonight about the budget. We obviously have a somewhat different view of the President's budget and the need to balance the budget perhaps than some of our colleagues. I brought with me some charts, and I am going to walk down there in a few minutes, and we are going to talk about what the President has proposed, what we might dispose. But I think most importantly we need to talk about, what does this mean to the average American family? What is this balancing the budget all about? Is it just some kind of an accounting exercise, or does it really ultimately impact real families and real Americans in homes and in the neighborhoods where they live?

Mr. Speaker, I think as we go through and talk a little bit about this, I think we can demonstrate that this really does have a dramatic impact not only on Americans today but, more importantly, on Americans in the future. We have some very serious problems, but I think, if we approach them in a cooperative relationship, a respectful relationship where we can have a civil and honest debate about the great issues facing our country today, then I think both the Congress and the American people will have been well served by what transpired up in Hershey, PA.
